Dear Nikki,

Thank you, beyond thank you. Now we pray – and I'll let you know whatever happens.

Love

Dear John,

GWHFC transgender client again – almost there this time.

After suffering from Housing Authority stasis and multiple cases of apparent housing discrimination since early February, and her husband [redacted] are at last ready to move into a one-bedroom apartment with a HACLA Section 8 voucher, but HACLA now seems to be dragging its feet. Their new caseworker there, a Ms. Baker or [redacted], has told their old caseworker Kelli Su that they are not likely to be able to move in until May 15 at the earliest.

All it takes is scheduling an inspection. GWHFC will take care of the move-in money. It could all be done this week – which is what Kelli Su promised Maya last week.

Would you be willing to give Ms. Baker the requisite nudge, or to have Stephanie do it? I have a feeling that HACLA can never be counted on to do anything unless they know you're looking over their shoulder, but you would think they'd be a little bit more sensitive these days in the case of a transgender female. Don't they read the newspaper?

With best regards, as ever,

Ted

Dear Stephanie,

Kelli Su of the Housing Authority called [REDACTED] yesterday and told her that she was waiting to hear from you about case. I emailed John Darnell about it after you and I spoke the other day (see below), and it still seems to me that a word from you or John might cause Kelli, ET AL, to do the right thing, which is to say clear the way for [REDACTED] common-law husband Tannan to move into a Section 8 apartment with her pending their getting married, which they very much intend to do. They've lived together, for the most part in the street, for over seven years.

[REDACTED] does not now appear on [REDACTED] voucher because of some bad advice she got from the private homeless services provider in Long Beach which helped her get the voucher.

That said, Jeromy is in many respects [REDACTED] mainstay. He has worked full-time at the same job for three years. He is a solid citizen. And although [REDACTED] herself has been offered a job at Target the minute they have a permanent place to live, [REDACTED] is the source of most of their income. All of that can be taken into account by the Housing Authority in a simple adjustment to the voucher after the fact, but if Kelli Su, ET AL object to any of it in the meantime, [REDACTED] are likely to remain homeless because of their objections.

Here's hoping you are still willing to play a role in helping them. As I see it, all this is really just a question of common sense overriding self-defeating bureaucratic procedures.

With best regards,

Ted

Dear John,

Could I call you for a five-minute chat first thing tomorrow Monday morning – about the problem GWHFC transgender client [REDACTED] and her common-law husband [REDACTED] continue to have with the City Housing Authority? I think Stephanie has done her best, but I think what is required is some of your clear thinking.

The object is to move [REDACTED] off the street TOGETHER, since they've been together for all of seven years, and not stand on undue ceremony because his name isn't currently on her Section 8 voucher.

Here's hoping you're willing to give this one more good whack. We are taking care of the problem of Kelli Su at HACLA not being about to talk to you and Stephanie for reasons of [REDACTED] privacy.

As ever,

Ted

This might not have occurred to you, but the Section 8 program contemplates changes in the client's income and in his (or her) living situation AFTER a move-in. The client is simply required to report it within the quarter in which it happens, so that the share of his (or her) rent can be adjusted up or down.

Which is to say, the easiest way to deal with this, as I see it, is for HACLA to tell Maya that she has to report income, as well as her new income from TARGET when she takes the job there. Jeremy would then appear on her voucher as a wage earner with her. Her Section 8 voucher now shows her to have no income other than GR.

Easy as that, wouldn't you say? The alternative, in the meantime, is nothing short of draconian.

We are all holding our breath at this end.

Mil gracias.

Dear John and Nikki,

The GWHFC has another problem with HACLA which I think you might be able to help us with, as follows. The only trouble with it (again) is that something has to be done now – today.

At stake are our longtime homeless clients [REDACTED] and [REDACTED] – she a fully transitioned transgender woman, and he her common law husband who has every intention of marrying her in a church wedding as soon as they get off the street.

They are expecting to hear tomorrow that they have been accepted as Section 8 tenants in a lovely one-bedroom apartment on Market Street in Inglewood, but today Kelli Su of HACLA (who can be reached at [REDACTED]) has told them that [REDACTED] will not be able to live in the apartment because they are not yet legally married and his name is not on the Section 8 voucher. This in spite of what I say about them above. They have been living together for the past seven years, most recently in a tent near La Brea and Melrose. [REDACTED] has a full-time job which he's had for three years, and Maya has been offered a job at TARGET on La Brea as soon as she has a permanent place to live.

If the Housing Authority won't budge, they will lose the apartment, and as you well know it AINT EASY to find a good Section 8 apartment these days. I was with them when they lost another one in the Crenshaw District last week, in what we all agreed was probably a case of gender discrimination.

Please help if you can. Interestingly, we have never had a problem of this kind with the County Housing Authority. Just the other day, in fact, a longtime client of ours for whom we had gotten an apartment in West Hollywood six years ago called to say that his common law wife had died, and she was on the Section 8 voucher – not he – so he thought he might be in trouble. No such thing: the County Housing Authority changed the voucher to add his name to it and didn't skip a beat in the process.

One thing is the noxious legalism which makes it that much harder to help the homeless, and another is just plain common sense. What, after all, is the extent of the risk in the case of _____? Near zero, I would say, as far as HACLA is concerned, but it's practically total for them. With El Nino upon us and with the opportunity to house a transgender woman who has been discriminated against since she declared herself at age 15, shouldn't HACLA bend over backwards?

With love to you both, and here's hoping

Ted

I don't know which of you can claim credit or what you did to deserve it, but Veronica Jacinto suddenly materialized early this afternoon and did what we had expected her to do two weeks ago, and Philip and I dashed to Compton so that he could sign his lease just under the wire.

All's well that ends well, but if any of you should want to deconstrcut exactly what went wrong in the first place I would of course like to tell you what i know.. Remember that I am a journalist first and a volunteer second.

For now, Merry Christmas to you all, and thank you no matter what. I have never seen anybody quite so happy or quite so relieved as Philip Johnson, a disabled homeless veteran now permanently housed.

Dear Stephanie,

The direct line for Veronica Jacinto at HACLA is

One other thing: Philip says the deadline problem (tomorrow) isn't exactly what I said it was, but it has the same effect. The property manager (Myra) told Philip she is leaving at the end of the day on a three week vacation.

We of the GWHFC simply can't afford to continue paying Philip's rent at a motel for another three weeks when Federal Government money which is available to HACLA and to which he is entitled is going unspent.

Please call me as early in the day as you can if you've been able to figure out how to avert this needless catastrophe, or if there is anything else either Philip or I can do to help him.

Again sincerely,

Ted

Dear John and Nikki,

Thank you both for jumping-to on this unfortunate business. Philip talked to the property manager today, whose name is Myra, and she said (1) she had not heard from Veronica Jacinto or anybody else at HACLA since the apartment passed inspection two weeks ago, and (2) if HACLA doesn't close the deal with her by tomorrow she will rent the apartment to somebody else, which is to say, Philip will be seriously out of luck. It took nearly three months for him to find the apartment in the first place, with the GWHFC and PATH both pulling out all stops.

If you can turn this around between today and tomorrow, you will be major heroes to us all. If you can't what a downer.

With best regards and again Merry Christmas to you both,

 Dear John and Nikki,

The other day I asked Councilman Dawson-Harris's press secretary to call Veronica Jacinto at the City Housing Authority and ask her why it's taking her so long to close the deal on a VASH apartment for GWHFC client Philip Johnson, a disabled veteran. He says he would, but it doesn't seem to have made any difference.

Philip found the apartment a month ago, but it took HACLA two weeks to inspect it, and although it passed they have still not closed the deal with the landlord. Philip says he understands there might be a $30 difference between the rent the landlord wants and the VASH rent ceiling.

We of the GWHFC are always impatient when public servants drag their feet in a case like this, and I must say it happens all-too often. Does Ms. Jacinto NOT know what it is to be homeless? A good question. I told the press secretary I was tempted to put on my journalist's hat and publish the answer.

Please help if you can. And Merry Christmas to you both, no matter what.
